

Manual vs automatic sequencing

- Manual sequencing has basically died out.
- It needs four lanes, radioactive gels, and a technician in one day from one gel can get four sets of four lanes, with maybe 300 base pairs of data from each template.
- Everyone now uses “automatic sequencing” – the downside is no one lab can afford the machine, so it is done in a central facility (eg. Keck center).
- Most automated DNA sequencers can load robotically and operate around the clock for weeks with minimal labor.
