

Lab: Energy Dynamics in an Ecosystem

Learning Objectives: After completing this lab, you should be able to:

- 1. Calculate the gross primary productivity (GPP) of a system.
- 2. Calculate the net primary productivity (NPP) of a system.
- 3. Explain the relationship between GPP and NPP.
- 4. Explain the relationship between GPP and the amount of energy available to the rest of the ecosystem.

Introduction: Energy flows through an ecosystem in a one-way direction, from the sun to the producers and then to the consumers. The amount of energy that enters an ecosystem is determined by the amount of light that falls on the producers. The amount of energy that is available to the rest of the ecosystem is determined by the amount of energy that is captured by the producers. The amount of energy that is captured by the producers is determined by the amount of light that falls on the producers. The amount of energy that is available to the rest of the ecosystem is determined by the amount of energy that is captured by the producers. The amount of energy that is captured by the producers is determined by the amount of light that falls on the producers.

Procedure:

1. Measure the amount of oxygen produced by the producers in a closed system.
2. Calculate the GPP of the system.
3. Calculate the NPP of the system.

- Questions:
1. What is the relationship between GPP and NPP?
 2. How does the amount of light affect GPP?
 3. How does the amount of light affect NPP?

Conclusion: The amount of energy that enters an ecosystem is determined by the amount of light that falls on the producers. The amount of energy that is available to the rest of the ecosystem is determined by the amount of energy that is captured by the producers. The amount of energy that is captured by the producers is determined by the amount of light that falls on the producers.
