QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine for the last 10 years. Recently, I noticed a strange noise coming from the front of the car. It sounds like a grinding or rattling noise. I have checked the oil level and it is fine. I have also checked the brake pads and they seem to be in good condition. What could be causing this noise?

ANSWER The noise you are describing could be caused by a number of factors. One possibility is a worn or damaged ball joint. Ball joints connect the control arms to the steering knuckles and allow the wheels to move up and down. If a ball joint is worn, it can create a grinding or rattling noise, especially when turning. Another possibility is a worn or damaged tie rod end. Tie rod ends connect the control arms to the steering knuckles and allow the wheels to turn. If a tie rod end is worn, it can create a similar noise. A third possibility is a worn or damaged CV axle. CV axles connect the engine to the wheels and allow the wheels to turn. If a CV axle is worn, it can create a grinding or rattling noise, especially when turning. Finally, a worn or damaged suspension spring could also cause this noise. Suspension springs support the weight of the car and allow the wheels to move up and down. If a spring is worn, it can create a grinding or rattling noise. To determine the exact cause of the noise, you should have the car inspected by a qualified mechanic. They will be able to check the ball joints, tie rod ends, CV axles, and suspension springs to see if any of them are worn or damaged. If they find a problem, they will be able to replace the part and the noise should go away.
