Figure 2 illustrates the structure of the proposed system. The system is designed to be a self-contained unit that can be used in a variety of environments. It consists of a central processing unit (CPU) that is connected to a memory unit (RAM) and a storage unit (hard drive). The CPU is also connected to a network interface card (NIC) that allows the system to communicate with other devices on a network. The system is designed to be flexible and scalable, allowing it to be used in a variety of environments.

These results suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in the community is a feasible and reliable method. The use of a single instrument also allows for the comparison of results across studies and countries, which is a valuable tool for public health research.
