Abstract

Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported mental health problems among a sample of young adults in the United States and to examine the association between self-reported mental health problems and self-reported physical health problems.

Methods: Data were obtained from the 2001 National Health and Medical Examination Survey, a nationally representative sample of the U.S. population. The sample was restricted to young adults aged 18-24 years. The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was determined for the sample as a whole and for subgroups defined by sex, race, and education. The association between self-reported mental health problems and self-reported physical health problems was examined using logistic regression.

Results: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems was 12.5% for the sample as a whole. The prevalence was higher for females than for males (14.5% vs. 10.5%), for Whites than for Blacks (13.5% vs. 11.5%), and for those with a high school diploma or less than for those with a college degree (13.5% vs. 11.5%). The association between self-reported mental health problems and self-reported physical health problems was positive, indicating that those with self-reported mental health problems were more likely to report physical health problems.

Conclusions: The prevalence of self-reported mental health problems among young adults in the United States is 12.5%. The prevalence is higher for females than for males, for Whites than for Blacks, and for those with a high school diploma or less than for those with a college degree. The association between self-reported mental health problems and self-reported physical health problems is positive, indicating that those with self-reported mental health problems are more likely to report physical health problems.

Keywords: Prevalence, Self-reported mental health problems, Self-reported physical health problems, Young adults, United States.

1. Problem Statement: The problem is to find the maximum value of the function  $f(x) = x^2 - 4x + 5$  over the interval  $[0, 4]$ .

2. Formulation: The problem is formulated as an optimization problem. The objective function is  $f(x) = x^2 - 4x + 5$ , and the domain is  $[0, 4]$ .

3. Analysis: The function  $f(x)$  is a quadratic function opening upwards. The vertex of the parabola is at  $x = 2$ , which is within the interval  $[0, 4]$ .

4. Solution: The maximum value of the function is found by evaluating  $f(x)$  at the endpoints of the interval and at the vertex. The values are  $f(0) = 5$ ,  $f(2) = 1$ , and  $f(4) = 5$ .

5. Conclusion: The maximum value of the function  $f(x)$  over the interval  $[0, 4]$  is 5, achieved at  $x = 0$  and  $x = 4$ .
