Transactions on Aspect-Oriented Software Development VI Shmuel Katz, Harold Ossher, 2009-10-26 work for small problems but it introduces significant accidental complexities when tackling larger problems. Not that the real challenge here is not how to design the system to take a particular aspect into account; there is significant design know-how in industry on this and it is often captured in the form of design patterns. Taking into account more than one aspect can be a little harder but many large scale successful projects in industry provide some evidence that engineers know how different concerns should be handled. The real challenge is reducing the effort that the engineer has to expend when grappling with many inter dependent concerns. For example in a product line context when an engineer wants to replace a variant of an aspect used in a system she should be able to do this cheaply quickly and safely. Manually weaving every aspect is not an option. Unlike many models used in the sciences models in software and in linguistics have the same nature as the things they model. In software this provides an opportunity to automatically derive software from its model that is to automate the weaving process. This requires models to be formal and the weaving process be described as a program i.e. an executable meta model manipulating models to produce a detailed design. The detailed design produced by the weaving process can ultimately be transformed to code or at least test suites.

Helmicki, 2006

According to the National Bridge Inventory the most common type of short to medium span highway bridge in the US is the reinforced concrete RC slab on steel girder bridge with RC abutments and piers comprising approximately half of Ohio's inventory. For these bridges AASHTO currently offers a number of rating methods each of which is based solely on theoretical and design calculations. These methods are known to result in subjective conservative ratings not calibrated against field measurements and hence possibly not objectively reflecting the realities and impacts of individual bridge condition as well as design details. Visual inspections provide at best qualitative and subjective information on bridge condition which is hard to incorporate into the rating process. One result of this approach is the potentially inefficient management and maintenance practices based on conservative subjective ratings and inspection reports. In addition there is the need to understand the true impact design and construction practices have on serviceability and safety of the bridge inventory something which cannot be explored based on the current approaches.
