

a highly promising, and increasingly competitive future. I'm proud to say our people have demonstrated just how focused and determined they can be in the face of significant change.

Of course, we'll all need to be prepared to embrace even more change ahead. But I am confident that our shared values – Integrity and Respect, Quality, Excelling, Creativity and Passion – will continue to provide the bedrock of a culture that inspires talent and empowers each of us to accomplish more than we might have thought possible. With a deep pool of leadership and an open pipeline of talent inside our Company, we can keep pace with rapid change and emerge stronger than we started.

Corporate Responsibility

Being a brand-led Company means brewing and building great brands the right way. Corporate responsibility is embedded in all of our business strategies, in every market. At Molson Coors, we have committed to be ethical and accountable in our business practices; to make quality products that we advertise and sell responsibly; to brew and package our products with care for the environment; to support the development, engagement and wellness of our people; and to invest in the communities where we live and work. All Molson Coors leaders are responsible for these commitments.

All of our businesses enjoy a long history of leadership in the community and of doing business the right way. This year, for the first time, we are reporting on our efforts at a global level. In December 2007, our corporate responsibility commitments and performance were explained on our new website: www.molsoncoors.com/responsibility. I encourage you to visit the website and to use the feedback form. Your comments will be carefully considered as we continue to address our corporate responsibilities.

The MillerCoors Joint Venture

Brewers that successfully drive change, win. A truly great global brewer needs to be a truly great competitor in the world's second-largest beer market, the United States. To that end, we signed a definitive agreement with SABMiller in December 2007 to combine our respective U.S. brewing businesses into a single joint venture: MillerCoors.

This new venture will create a stronger, more competitive brewer with the scale, resources and distribution to compete more effectively in the highly competitive U.S. beer market. It will create a whole new level of cost synergies – more than $500 million by the third full year – allowing us to invest in our brands and compete in more markets than ever before, all of which benefits the American beer consumer.
