It is based on the fact that the probability of a person's being infected with AIDS is directly proportional to the number of sexual partners he or she has had. This is a reasonable assumption because the more people a person has sex with, the more likely it is that he or she will come in contact with someone who has the virus. Stronger Women: a recent addition to the new Entrepreneurship series, now adding a new dimension to the existing approach. In the Entrepreneur, the reader gets the best and latest in research.

Abstract. The first job assignment method against the two-dimensional measurement model was investigated. Results showed that the two-dimensional measurement model was more appropriate than the one-dimensional measurement model in terms of validity and reliability. These results provide evidence for a two-factor model, and suggest employers' great interest in specific factors related to the assignment of employees to jobs. In particular, it seems that the two-dimensional measurement model is more appropriate than the one-dimensional measurement model.
