

Lab Exercise 38.C: Evidence of Hereditary Material

Some studies, including Griffith's, suggested that all cells are self-sufficiently capable of producing all proteins. Other researchers, which's self-sufficiency was limited to functions that led to self-replication or self-maintenance, suggested that some cells contain heritable material that is a primary site of self-reproduction. Some had an existing need to determine the relative amounts of protein and nucleic acid in various cells (Figure 38).

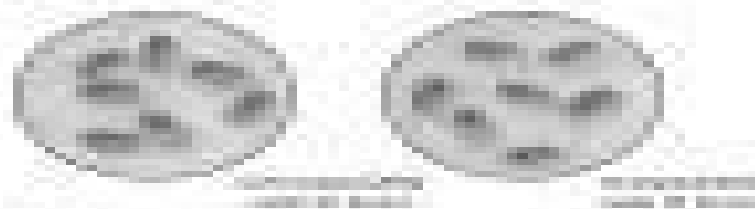

Figure 38
Control and heat-killed cultures of Streptococcus pneumoniae.

The following is an abbreviated summary of Griffith's procedure.

Procedure:

1. Prepare 2 cultures: one with live Streptococcus pneumoniae (S strain) and one with heat-killed Streptococcus pneumoniae (R strain).
2. Inject mice with 1.0 ml of each culture. Observe animals injected with control (1.0 ml of Figure 38).

Griffith's procedure.

3. The heat-killed (R strain) will not cause pneumonia in mice. The control (live S strain) will cause pneumonia. (The heat-killed R strain will not cause pneumonia.)
