Design of a Linear Programming System for the Illiac

IV. C. E. Pfefferkorn, Stanford University. Systems Optimization Laboratory, J. A. Tomlin, 1976 This paper outlines a design for implementing a linear programming system on the ILLIAC IV computer The central concern is to take advantage of the special features of the ILLIAC IV 64 parallel processing elements large fast disk memory and relatively small fast core memory and at the same time to take advantage of the sparsity of real large scale linear programs and the mostly serial methodology which has been developed to exploit this sparsity This requires both the adaption of existing techniques to a parallel environment and the development of a new parallel techniques for efficient sparse matrix processing It appears that this can be done successfully and that ILLIAC IV should be able to solve problems considerably larger than those which can be attempted on serial computers Author

The Highway Design and Maintenance Standards Model: User's manual for the

HDM-III model, 1987 This book describes the Highway Design and Maintenance Standards model HDM III and its constituent components and provides a comprehensive discussion of the submodels their interaction and the operational parameters involved The HDM III is designed to make comparative cost estimates and economic evaluations of different construction and maintenance options including different time staging strategies either for a given road project on a specific alignment or for groups of links on an entire network The user can search for the alternative with the lowest discounted total cost and can call for rates of return net present values or first year benefits If the HDM is used in conjunction with the Expenditure Budgeting Model the set of design and maintenance options that would minimize total discounted transport costs or maximize net present value of an entire highway system under year to year budget constraints can be determined The HDM III model is not only a readily usable program for handling voluminous computations automatically it is also a repository of the most extensive and consistent set of empirical data on the subject The information includes the qualitative structure and quantitative parameters of relationships among construction standards maintenance traffic characteristics road deterioration and vehicle operating costs
