Magnum Editors of Phaidon Press, 2004-09-22 A 1947 lunch meeting of four friends proved to be one of the most auspicious dates in the history of photojournalism It was around a lunch table that day that Robert Capa Henri Cartier Bresson George Rodger and David Seymour each recently returned from covering World War II and its aftermath formed the Magnum photo agency Since then Magnum photographers with their singular knack for capturing history in an instant have been responsible for creating many of the most iconic images of our world in both war and peace Magnum Degrees is a selection of agency photos that illustrates the range of subject matter and imagery the photographers have captured over the last half century The book which overflows with photographs and includes only the briefest amount of text is arranged thematically to effectively highlight the wide scope of images even within a narrow field In Middle East Larry Towell captures boys playing in Gaza while Micha Bar Am trains his camera on a Jewish man wrapped in a prayer shawl fleeing a smoke bomb in Jerusalem In India in the town of Benares Ferdinando Scianna snaps photos of an excruciatingly thin man carrying his dead daughter and two nicely dressed young girls frolicking in the water In Religion photographer Abbas trains his lens both on a man reenacting the Crucifixion in the Philippines and a woman being physically moved by the Holy Spirit in a rural Georgia church As some of the themes Refugees Child Victims In the Camps War in Africa suggest many of the images here are powerfully disturbing Others particularly those collected under the headings Trees Fishing and Architecture are lyrically beautiful Still others like Martin Parr s photographs of tourists on vacation the world over are witty and comic Taken together the thousand or so photos here capture the often surprising always complex nature of humanity and do justice to the agency founders original intention to document the world as it really is Jordana Moskowitz
