What Is a Focus Group?

A focus group is a focused discussion group that follows a structured questioning route. It typically consists of a facilitator who runs the group, sometimes a co-facilitator or note taker, and 6 to 10 participants. The facilitator uses a script that includes a set of questions that are posed to the group.

A focus group looks and feels informal, but it's actually carefully planned and orchestrated. The format is designed to evoke rich information and insights that would be difficult to get through other data collection methods—for example, through a survey or one-on-one interviews.
