Coastal Response to Navigation Structures at Murrells Inlet, South Carolina: Main text and appendixes A and B Scott L. Douglass,1987 Coastal response to navigation structures at Murrells Inlet S C is documented herein Data which results from a postconstruction monitoring program consist of beach inlet and jetty surveys aerial photography visual wave observations wave buoy results hindcast wave results and site inspection trips These data were collected during the period 1978 1982 approximately 5 years after jetty construction began Beach change and wave data collected indicate that net longshore sand transport at the inlet has not been strongly to the south as previously assumed The variability of longshore sand transport rate in time and space appears to be very important to coastal response to the jetties Longshore transport rates are calculated from visual wave observations for 1979 1982 The direction of net transport was northward at all four wave data locations in 1979 and was toward the inlet from both sides during 1980 1982 The only wave data south of the inlet was close enough to be strongly affected by the jetties therefore a local reversal in net transport direction could have occurred south of the inlet during 1980 1982 Analysis of hindcast wave data for 1956 1975 indicates that the major southerly growth of the tip of Garden City in the early 1960 s may have been in response to an unusually strong period of southerly sand transport Possible modifications to the navigation project are suggested for further consideration and analysis Improvements in the Murrells Inlet monitoring data collection program are recommended in light of the conclusions reached in this report Author Government Reports Announcements & Index ,1975 Railroad Telegrapher ,1929 The Railroad Telegrapher ,1929 Report of South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department South Carolina. Wildlife and Marine Resources Department,1992 Sources of Coastal Engineering Information Yen-Hsi Chu,Robert B. Lund,Frederick E. Camfield,1987 Economic Impact of the Effects of Pollution on the Coastal Fisheries of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico Regions of the United States of America Herman E. Kumpf,1977 This report reviews and evaluates the economic impact on the fisheries of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico coasts of the United States of other human activities Four types of impact were considered production of oil and gas direct fish mortalities caused by effluent habitat deterioration and closure of molluscan fisheries for health reasons An attempt is made to obtain quantitative dollar estimates of the impacts both negative and positive The main quantifiable effects are of habitat destruction on species requiring estuaries and similar areas as nurseries particularly in the Gulf and Middle Atlantic region and molluscan fisheries again the Gulf region is particularly affected Fish kills seem highly variable from year to year FAO Fisheries Technical Paper,1977 Ecological Effects of Rubble Weir Jetty Construction at Murrells Inlet, South Carolina: Changes in macrobenthic communities of Sandy Beach and nearshore environments Robert F.
