From the 1970s onwards, the use of the word 'gender' has become more common in the social sciences, and it has been used to refer to the social and cultural aspects of sex. This has led to a distinction between 'sex' and 'gender', where 'sex' refers to the biological characteristics of an individual, and 'gender' refers to the social and cultural characteristics of an individual. This distinction has been used to explain the differences in the experiences of men and women in society, and it has been used to develop theories of gender inequality and gender discrimination.
