Intraspecific communication involves the activation of chemoreceptors and subsequent activation of different central areas that coordinate the responses of the entire organism ranging from behavioral modification to modulation of hormones release. Animals emit intraspecific chemical signals often referred to as pheromones to advertise their presence to members of the same species and to regulate interactions aimed at establishing and regulating social and reproductive bonds. In the last two decades scientists have developed a greater understanding of the neural processing of these chemical signals. Neurobiology of Chemical Communication explores the role of the chemical senses in mediating intraspecific communication. Providing an up to date outline of the most recent advances in the field it presents data from laboratory and wild species ranging from invertebrates to vertebrates from insects to humans. The book examines the structure anatomy electrophysiology and molecular biology of pheromones. It discusses how chemical signals work on different mammalian and non mammalian species and includes chapters on insects Drosophila honey bees amphibians mice tigers and cattle. It also explores the controversial topic of human pheromones. An essential reference for students and researchers in the field of pheromones this is also an ideal resource for those working on behavioral phenotyping of animal models and persons interested in the biology ecology of wild and domestic species.
