

Chapter 3.8 Limitations of markets

Answers to activities and case studies

Case study, p.208

- 1 There is no 'right' answer as such. What matters are the reasons given for your choice and the explanation. It is possible to give reasons why the other method would be less effective in support of the argument for your choice (see pp. 208–09) You should aim to offer at least three reasons.

Activity, p. 209

- 1 A negative externality is the harmful effect of an economic activity on a third party, also known as external cost.
- 2 Possible negative externalities include:
  - health effects, e.g. cancer, asthma, effect on lungs
  - staining of walls, furniture etc.
  - litter – cigarette ends/ash dropped on paths
  - foul air

You may well come up with other valid ideas.

- 3 It is likely that PED is fairly inelastic:

The demand curve has different elasticities depending on which part is being used (see pp. 39–41). A rise in price due to taxation from  $P$  to  $P^1$  will have far more effect on price than on quantity, but as price rises the line becomes more elastic so that a further rise in price to  $P^2$  will result in a larger percentage fall in quantity and thus be more effective than a small increase in taxation.

NB the activity asks you to evaluate so you must support your conclusion with your analysis.

- 4 Other policies would include: legislation and regulation, better information about the dangers of smoking, subsidising competitive products.

NB again the activity asks you to evaluate so you must support your conclusion with your explanations
