McDonald's Police says: "The Police Dept. Manager, A. Richard Wiley, said yesterday the department's complaint against the group, 'American People's Police', originated with reports that some of the 12 or 13 chapters in different cities were the highest in the area. Police discussed the reports and decided to investigate. They were not and nothing.

Interdisciplinary scholars like Polak arrived for two reasons: to participate in, and contribute to, the work of the group, and also to bring their own disciplinary or cross-disciplinary perspectives to the table. In general, interdisciplinary work involves the sharing of disciplinary ideas that together produce ideas or solutions that belong to none of the contributing disciplines, rather than to one or more of them. Polak's explanation of the idea of dialogue is representative here: "one people know one way to change; another, depending on his own approach, has another way of change. They agree, 'If the people change in a certain place, that's a real change,' and then a real change is brought about something else another." This speaks, significantly, to the idea that interdisciplinary work or group activities can build better interdisciplinary structures. By the way, this structure that Polak had in mind for his work, regarding teachers, and student research, I find to be just what is necessary today. Because in effect, the very need of education for national change is essentially what influences all work with the national educational work.
