In regard to programming, it is highly possible that local markets in the United States, as well as markets in Europe, will be able to make the most of their 30- to 60-second slots. If television has a role in advertising, however, it will not be through networks. I am sure that the market pattern in the United States is quickly to resemble that of Europe. The United States has become more a land of spots or low repetition-lengthy advertising than a market depending upon a network's advertising program.
