Eothen - A. W. Kinglake A. W. Kinglake, 2009-11-27 A passage from the book At Semlin I still was encompassed by the scenes and the sounds of familiar life the din of a busy world still vexed and cheered me the unveiled faces of women still shone in the light of day Yet whenever I chose to look southward I saw the Ottoman's fortress austere and darkly impending high over the vale of the Danube historic Belgrade I had come as it were to the end of this wheel going Europe and now my eyes would see the splendour and havoc of the East The two frontier towns are less than a cannon shot distant and yet their people hold no communion The Hungarian on the north and the Turk and Servian on the southern side of the Save are as much asunder as though there were fifty broad provinces that lay in the path between them Of the men that bustled around me in the streets of Semlin there was not perhaps one who had ever gone down to look upon the stranger race dwelling under the walls of that opposite castle It is the plague and the dread of the plague that divide the one people from the other All coming and going stands forbidden by the terrors of the yellow flag If you dare to break the laws of the quarantine you will be tried with military haste the court will scream out your sentence to you from a tribunal some fifty yards off the priest instead of gently whispering to you the sweet hopes of religion will console you at duelling distance and after that you will find yourself carefully shot and carelessly buried in the ground of the lazaretto When all was in order for our departure we walked down to the precincts of the quarantine establishment and here awaited us a compromised 1 officer of the Austrian Government who lives in a state of perpetual excommunication The boats with their compromised rowers were also in readiness Eothen
