inflammatory rheumatoid disorders a plethora of pathologies have been associated with defects in genes involved in clearance e g atherosclerosis cancer gout diabetes some forms of blindness neuropathy schizophrenia and Alzheimer s disease The main goal of this research topic is to collect contributions from various disciplines committed to studying pathogenetic mechanisms of the aforementioned disorders and dealing with alterations in the clearance of dying and dead cells their remnants and their constituents that leak out after membrane rupture Integrating the combined collection of knowledge on efferocytosis and clearance of dead cells and their derived waste from different fields of research in physiology and pathophysiology could improve the molecular understanding of these increasingly prevalent diseases and may ultimately result in new therapeutic strategies
