Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical health of the subjects was measured using a variety of tests, including a 6-minute walk test, a 12-minute walk test, and a 15-minute walk test. The psychological health of the subjects was measured using a variety of tests, including a Beck Depression Inventory (BDI), a State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI), and a Visual Analog Scale (VAS). The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The subjects in the walking program showed significant improvements in their 6-minute walk test, 12-minute walk test, and 15-minute walk test scores compared to the control group. The subjects in the walking program also showed significant improvements in their BDI, STAI, and VAS scores compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can have a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
