The ITIL guiding principles

Guiding principle	Description
Focus on value	Everything that the organization does needs to map, directly or indirectly, to value for the organization. The focus on value principle encompasses many perspectives, including the experience of customers and users. Do not wait that an opportunity will arise spontaneously without considering what is already available. It is leveraged. There is likely to be a great deal in the current services portfolio, programs, projects, and people that can be used to create the desired outcome. The current state should be investigated and assessed closely to make sure it is fully understood. Do not attempt to do everything at once. Start with a small, achievable, measurable commitment to do so. By organizing work into smaller, manageable sections that can be completed and completed in a timely manner, the team can maintain a sharp focus on each effort.
Start where you are	Recognize the current state, its strengths, and what can be leveraged. Do not assume that what is current and appropriate. Use the current state as a starting point for change. Working together across boundaries and silos, the team can create a shared vision of the future state, and a shared understanding of the current state.
Progress iteratively with feedback	Recognize that the current state is not perfect. Iterative improvement is a continuous process. The team should be able to learn from its mistakes and make adjustments as needed.
Collaborate and promote visibility	Recognize that the current state is not perfect. Iterative improvement is a continuous process. The team should be able to learn from its mistakes and make adjustments as needed.

Costs introduced

Achieving desired outcomes requires resources (and therefore costs) and is often associated with risk. Service providers help their customers to achieve outcomes and to design, take on, and manage the associated risks and costs. On the other hand, service relationships can introduce risks and costs, and in some cases, can negatively affect some of the intended outcomes after supporting others.

Operational and technical

Management and support, including the operational, technical, and operational aspects, should all be considered to provide a desired value. If a process, service, or other tool is to provide value to produce a desired outcome, it is a process, a procedure, or the minimum number of steps necessary to accomplish the objective. Always use customer feedback to improve and refine processes that deliver results.
Processes of all types, particularly self-service, require that they be well-defined, documented, and truly executed and not technology in place. Whether it is a process of human interaction, it should only support and not replace human interaction.
