

Boil-Off Gas handling onboard LNG fuelled ships

By Dr. Ravi K. Sankar, Director, Research and Development, Indian Institute of Technology, Madras

Boil-off gas (BOG) is a by-product of the liquefaction process. It is a mixture of methane and ethane, which is released from the LNG cargo tanks. The BOG is collected and stored in a dedicated storage tank on the ship. The BOG can be used as a fuel for the ship's engines or can be vented to the atmosphere. The BOG handling system is a critical component of the LNG fuelled ship. It ensures that the BOG is safely stored and can be used as a fuel when needed.

The BOG handling system consists of a BOG compressor, a BOG storage tank, and a BOG engine. The BOG compressor is used to compress the BOG from its natural state to a higher pressure. The BOG storage tank is used to store the compressed BOG. The BOG engine is used to burn the BOG and generate power for the ship's engines. The BOG handling system is designed to ensure that the BOG is safely stored and can be used as a fuel when needed. It also ensures that the BOG is not vented to the atmosphere, which would be a waste of energy and a potential safety hazard.

The BOG handling system is a complex system that requires careful design and operation. It must be able to handle the BOG at different pressures and temperatures. It must also be able to handle the BOG in different states, such as liquid, gas, and solid. The BOG handling system must be able to handle the BOG in a safe and efficient manner. It must be able to handle the BOG in a way that minimizes the risk of accidents and ensures the safety of the ship and its crew.

The BOG handling system is a key component of the LNG fuelled ship. It ensures that the BOG is safely stored and can be used as a fuel when needed. It also ensures that the BOG is not vented to the atmosphere, which would be a waste of energy and a potential safety hazard.
