1.2 Background information

A reaction that will occur in both directions at the same time is called an equilibrium reaction.

An equilibrium reaction is called an equilibrium reaction because equilibrium is reached in a reaction mixture. Equilibrium is reached when the concentrations of the reactants and products are the same. The equilibrium shifts in a direction to keep the system in balance.

Le Chatelier's principle states that if a system is at equilibrium and a change is made to the system, the system will shift in a direction to counteract the change. For example, if a reaction is exothermic, the system will shift in a direction to absorb heat.
