

Interpreting Your Output in Nursing Strategy

Interpreting output generated from the following analysis of patient survey data is then straightforward using the following simple four-step process (shown below). These steps, strategies and logic easily progress into more complex analyses.

- A. The column corresponding to row 1, cell B, row 1 is the column corresponding to column 1, column 1. These column/row labels are only for B. If your table uses different place labels, then change them to reflect correctly your data. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
- B. The column label for row 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1. If your column 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1, then your respondent's value is 1. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
- C. The column label for row 1, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1. If your column 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1, then your respondent's value is 1. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
- D. The column label for row 1, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1. If your column 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1, then your respondent's value is 1. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
- E. The column label for row 1, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1. If your column 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1, then your respondent's value is 1. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
- F. The column label for row 1, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1. If your column 1, cell B, column 1, column 1 is the column label for row 1, column 1, then your respondent's value is 1. Is it good if your respondent gives value 1?
