

It might look tricky to find the area of a parallelogram, but in fact it is quite easy because any parallelogram can be rearranged as a rectangle.

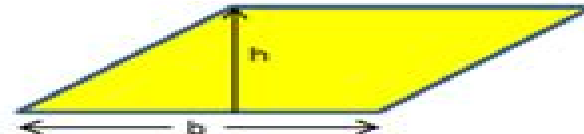

This makes the area of a parallelogram easy to find;

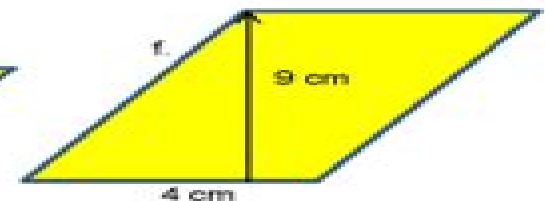

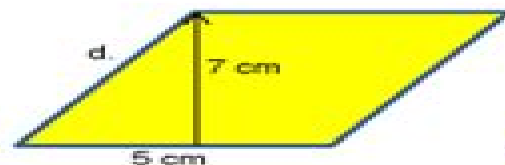

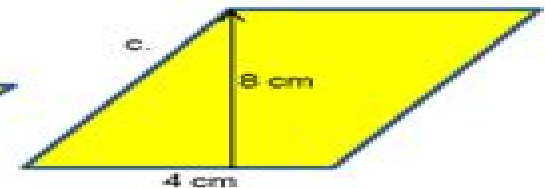

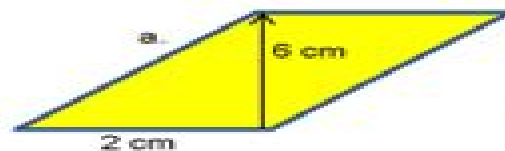

1. measure the base (b)
2. measure the vertical height (h)

Note: this is not the sloping line

3. multiply base by height ($b \times h$)

Find the area of these parallelograms. Use the formula $b \times h$ as they are not drawn to scale. (Answers in square centimetres please.)
