

Organizational Structure Essay Sample for Free Use Essay

The Size of an Organization

The size of an organization plays a very significant role in determining the organizational structure. For instance, a small scale organization will look out for a simple structure which would demand too little or even no intermediary management involvement in decision making for the implementation of organizational strategies and operations. An excellent example of this is a business with only 10 employees, however; a business with 1,000 employees in its workforce may require a top-bottom structure with intermediary management levels like senior, middle and lower management levels together with the employees to ensure proper implementation of the company visions.

Organizational Development stage

The choice of an organizational structure is also determined by the business lifecycle. Under several circumstances, business organizations that are in their initial developmental stage tend to emphasize the authority on the hands of the founding management without a formal structural design because at this level the business owners do not have the mastery of which determining factors for organizational structure. Conversely, the more a company advances in its operational phases, the executive management often changes from a more centralized top management structure to more of a pyramid structure in which authority is evenly granted throughout all levels.

Type of Business Strategy

The manner in which a company is positioned in its marketplace is a very significant determinant for the kind of organizational structure to implement. A good example is a case where a company is pursuing differentiation approach to be recognized as the first company to offer the best quality products or services then it may consider going for an agile organizational structure that may enable its quick response to changes in the marketplace. A structure like a flat structure which allows the employees to reach up too quick decisions without any superintendent approval. However, a company on the pursuit for a tactic of innovation of the already existing products or services in the marketplace which implies being efficient to achieve success, then it is likely to implement a top-bottom organizational structure because it provides a clear chain of commands. This is because the alignment of a strategy with a corporate structural design maximizes the chances for company success.

Environmental Determinants

Designing of a suitable organizational structure would require the consideration of the surrounding environment of a company because the working environment of employees is a very significant factor in determining the type of organizational structure. For instance a working environment which is unpredictable and rapidly changing demands a flexible, adaptable and interdepartmental structure because, in such circumstances, a rigid structure would suppress the flexibility of the
