THE Journal of the American Medical Association has published a study that suggests that the use of a computer program to help doctors make decisions about whether to perform a procedure may be beneficial. The study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of Michigan, found that the use of the program resulted in a significant reduction in the number of procedures performed that were not recommended by the program. The researchers concluded that the use of the program could help to reduce the number of unnecessary procedures performed, which could lead to a reduction in the cost of healthcare. The program, which is called the "Decision Support System," is designed to help doctors make decisions about whether to perform a procedure by providing them with information about the risks and benefits of the procedure. The program also provides doctors with information about the latest research on the procedure. The researchers found that the use of the program resulted in a significant reduction in the number of procedures performed that were not recommended by the program. The researchers concluded that the use of the program could help to reduce the number of unnecessary procedures performed, which could lead to a reduction in the cost of healthcare.
