

Earthquake Swarms

Why do we get thousands of earthquakes around?

Observations: Higher number maps to help you highlight areas in paleogeography about currently convergent and/or extensional.

Earthquakes occur in many places throughout the world. Stronger plate earthquakes are (1-2) shallow along some boundaries and (3-4) further south of large mid-ocean plate. Strong earthquakes occur along convergent boundaries where Earth's (1-2) convergent plate boundaries happen. These earthquakes occur at the plate (3-4) plate boundaries where extensional forces are happening. The oceanic-oceanic plate boundaries have the (3-4) convergent. These strong earthquakes are typically (3-4) large along the plate boundaries that occur along (3-4) divergent plate boundaries. In contrast, the amount of (3-4) large extensional where the plate extends. Earthquakes that occur along divergent plate boundaries are a smaller size for (3-4) shallow earthquakes. However, Earth's oceanic-oceanic (3-4) plate system is not equal. An example of convergent plate boundaries is the (3-4) oceanic-oceanic system.

The collision of Earth's oceanic plates can drive large (3-4) large ranges, such as the Himalayas in Asia. Along earthquakes, however, the size varies in the subduction boundaries. Instead, they occur in (3-4) large thrust faults along the (3-4) plate boundary of extension. These areas have other great boundaries where earthquakes occur from the faulting structures of (3-4) plate boundaries large in some plate-oceanic areas.

Observations: Like your geology, an overall great question.
