

The Mole and Equations

This is the moment where the 'mole of moles' comes in. It's a bit of a joke, but it's true. From page 104 onwards, you'll see how the mole is used to calculate masses in reactions.

You Can Use Moles to Calculate Masses in Reactions

Remember those balanced equations back on page 100? Well, the balancing numbers in front of the chemical formulae of the reactants and products tell you how many moles of each substance takes part in or is formed during the reaction.

For example:

In this reaction, 1 mole of magnesium and 2 moles of hydrochloric acid react together to form 1 mole of magnesium chloride and 1 mole of hydrogen gas.

You Can Balance Equations Using Reacting Masses

If you know the masses of the reactants and products that took part in a reaction, you can work out the balanced symbol equation for the reaction. Here are the steps you should take:

1. Write the mass of each substance by its relative formula mass for that the number of moles.
2. Write the number of moles of each substance by the symbol number of moles in the reaction.
3. If any of the numbers aren't whole numbers, multiply all the numbers by the same amount so that they all become whole numbers.
4. Write the balanced symbol equation for the reaction by putting these numbers in front of the chemical formulae.

EXAMPLE 1

81 g of zinc reacts completely with 0.60 g of carbon to form 32 g of zinc oxide and 0.5 g of gas. Write a balanced symbol equation for this reaction.

1. Write out the mass of each substance in the reaction.

These numbers give the mass of each substance in the reaction.

2. The numbers are of moles of each substance in the reaction. Write the balanced symbol equation for the reaction.

Where do moles live? Digiborrow...

The calculations on this page have lots of steps, so the best way to learn how to do them is to practice. Luckily, there are some practice books to get you started. Don't say I didn't warn you. Digiborrow get working!

1. 81 g of Zn reacts completely with 0.6 g of C, to produce 32 g of ZnO.
2. Calculate the mass of each substance involved or was produced.
3. Use your answers to put in the balanced symbol equation for the reaction.

Limiting Reactants

Reactions don't go on forever — you need stuff in the reaction that can react. If one reactant gets used up in a reaction before the rest, then the reaction will stop. That reactant's called limiting.

Reactions Stop When One Reactant Is Used Up

When some calcium carbonate (CaCO_3) is placed into a beaker of hydrochloric acid, you can tell a reaction is taking place because you see lots of bubbles of gas being given off. After a while, the amount of acid disappears and the reaction eventually stops.

1. The reaction stops when all of one of the reactants is used up. Any other reactants are in excess. They're usually added in excess to make sure that the other reactant is used up.
2. The reactant that's used up in a reaction is called the limiting reactant (because it limits the amount of product that's formed).
3. The amount of product formed is directly proportional to the amount of limiting reactant. For example, if you double the amount of limiting reactant the amount of product formed will also double. If you double the amount of limiting reactant the amount of product will double (as long as it is still the limiting reactant).
4. This is because if you add more reactant there will be more product available to take part in the reaction, which means more product will be formed.

The Amount of Product Depends on the Limiting Reactant

You can calculate the mass of a product formed in a reaction by using the mass of the limiting reactant and the balanced reaction equation.

1. Write out the balanced equation.
2. Work out the relative formula masses (M_r) of the reactant and product you want.
3. Find out how many moles there are of the substance you know the mass of.
4. Use the balanced equation to work out how many moles there'll be of the other substance. In this case, that's how many moles of product will be made of the mass of reactant.
5. Use the number of moles to calculate the mass.

EXAMPLE 2

Calculate the mass of aluminium oxide formed when 105 g of aluminium is burned in air.

1. Write out the balanced equation.
2. Calculate the relative formula masses.
3. Calculate the number of moles of aluminium = 105 g.
4. Look at the ratio of moles in the equation.
5. Calculate the mass of 2.5 moles of aluminium oxide.

'A Dash of Mad to the Head' — my favourite album by Moby-Dick

I've read it before, I'll read it again! — practical moles problem. So before you get down to work, here's a bit of a warm-up. Here's a bit of the question before.

1. The balanced equation for the reaction between aluminium and potassium permanganate is:
2. Calculate the mass of potassium permanganate produced when 13.5 g of potassium reacts with an excess of aluminium.
