There is a growing consensus among scholars that the 1990s were a period of significant change in the global economy. This change was driven by a combination of factors, including the end of the Cold War, the collapse of the Soviet Union, and the rapid growth of emerging markets. These factors created a new global economic order, one that was more integrated and competitive than ever before. The 1990s also saw the rise of globalization, as trade and investment flows increased across the world. This led to a more interconnected global economy, one that was more resilient to shocks and more capable of sustaining growth. The 1990s were a time of great opportunity and challenge, and it is important to understand the factors that shaped this period in order to better understand the world we live in today.
