- 1) Savings accounts with interest paid every six (6) months. The interest earned is compounded. Typical accounts pay simple interest. Most other accounts compound interest at varying frequencies. Accounts that compound by a savings account often pay a 2.5% interest compounded annually.
- 2) A certificate of deposit (CD) is an interest-bearing instrument with a maturity time as savings account. It is insured and pays interest. Unlike savings accounts, CDs have a fixed time period (usually a fixed period) before the CD can be withdrawn. The interest is compounded. Most single interest CDs have rates. Simple interest is calculated using the time period deposit. The CD must be held until the date of maturity, at which time the original money deposited plus the interest will be returned. Accounts that compound by a CD often pay a 2.5% simple interest for five years.
- 3) Accounts with the variable rate, increasing the rate after the first three years. If the rate increases, the interest will be calculated.
