MUSCULOSKELETAL SYSTEM EXAM WITH QUESTIONS, ANSWERS & RATIONALES

NCLEX PREP

*All answers and Rationales are in RED

A client has had a below-the-knee amputation of the leg. What is important for the nurse to consider when providing postoperative care for a client who had an amputation of a lower extremity?

1. Strict bed rest is maintained for at least several days.
2. The residual limb should not be elevated for the first 24 hours.
3. Hemorrhage rarely occurs during the early postoperative period.
4. Primary healthcare providers usually change the dressing on the residual limb within 48 hours.

2 - The residual limb should not be elevated for the first 24 hours.

Elevation of the residual limb helps prevent edema; however, should not be done on the first 24 hours and continued elevation may lead to hip contractures. The client usually is out of bed on the second postoperative day. Hemorrhage and infection are the two most common complications. The dressing usually is a pressure dressing and is not changed this soon postoperatively.

The nurse is caring for a client with rheumatoid arthritis. When should the nurse expect the client to experience the most pain and limited movement of the joints?

1. After assistive exercise
2. When the room is cool
3. During the evening hours
4. In the morning on awakening

4 - In the morning on awakening

Inactivity over an extended time increases stiffness and pain in joints. The client typically has morning stiffness, or gel phenomenon. Assistive exercises help maintain joint mobility. Whether the room is cool is not a factor; cold applications may decrease joint discomfort. The pain is not as severe in the evening as in the morning.

A client with rheumatoid arthritis asks the nurse about ways to decrease morning stiffness. What should the nurse suggest?

1. Wearing loose but warm clothing
2. Planning a short rest break periodically
3. Avoiding excessive physical stress and fatigue
4. Taking a hot tub bath or shower in the morning
