Procedure for Application of Mathematical Techniques to Fault Isolation RADIO CORP OF AMERICA BURLINGTON MA AEROSPACE SYSTEMS DIV.,1964 This manual describes the application of a mathematical technique for performing fault isolation of electronic circuits The technique developed makes use of a general purpose digital computer to determine mathematically which component has failed This technique is based upon the theory of inverse probability and comprises two major parts The first part involves computing theoretical failure symptoms for a particular circuit configuration for which fault isolation is desired This step would be accomplished at a Program Preparation Facility The second part involves taking actual data on a failed circuit and introducing these data along with the pre computed failure symptoms into a Fault Isolation Computer Program to select the faulty component This second part is accomplished at a Field Installation and would be performed for each failed circuit as the workload of these circuits demands The manual describes the steps required for the implementation of both parts Author Interactive Maintenance Terminal Fault Isolation Program Michael Henry Bulat,1981 Project FIST Gustave Shapiro,United States. National Bureau of Standards,George J. Rogers,Owen B. Laug,1964 Project FIST Fault Isolation by Semi Automatic Techniques has been conducted at the National Bureau of Standards under the sponsorship of the Department of the Navy Bureau of Ships Application of these techniques is biased toward shipboard installations and other areas where small size and weight though important are not overwhelmingly so and where a moderate increase of size and weight may be profitably traded off against a practical maintenance capability The system is one that must be included in the initial design of the prime equipment if its full potential is to be realized When considering fault isolation techniques it appears logical to divide all electronic devices into two groups computer systems both digital and analog and non computer systems Perhaps the most efficient way to diagnose faults in computer equipment is to program test problems along which lines much work has been done However in non computer areas such as variety of circuits and functions are encountered that no general method other than manual has previously been demonstrated to have wide utility For these reasons a decision was made early in this program to concentrate on the development of those techniques that would best fit non computer applications Although these techniques could be used to isolate faults in computer equipment it is suggested that other techniques specifically tailored to computer needs may be more efficiently
