Read TEXTS A AND B below and answer the questions set.

TEXT ACULTURAL APPROPRIATION

|---|--|----|
| 1 | In sections of the media concerned with representation and social justice, it seems we can barely endure a week without a newsworthy incident about 'cultural appropriation'. While examples of cultural appropriation can be found in just about any cultural facet or artefact ¹ , the true complexity of cultural appropriation is often not fully appreciated or sufficiently articulated. | 5 |
| 2 | Cultural appropriation involves the use of one culture's elements by a group or individual that does not belong to that culture. However, this definition is lacking because such an interaction may be labelled simply as cultural exchange. And that argument would be difficult to defeat because, firstly, who 'owns' a culture? And secondly, borrowing from one culture and lending to another has been the way of the world since human society began, according to recorded history and anthropologists. | 10 |

The word 'cultural appropriation' describes different from 'cultural appreciation'. The latter refers to the act of learning about and understanding a culture in order to appreciate the values of the community to which it belongs and to foster a sense of respect and understanding. The former refers to the act of taking elements of another group, such as the group whose culture has been appropriated to other domains and contexts because of their own cultural values.

A recent example of cultural appropriation is the wearing of traditional American Native headdresses, which are an integral part of the Native American culture, by non-Native people. This is a form of cultural appropriation because it is taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture. This is a form of cultural appropriation because it is taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture. This is a form of cultural appropriation because it is taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture.

In a 2016 report, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) stated that 'cultural appropriation' is the act of taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture. This is a form of cultural appropriation because it is taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture. This is a form of cultural appropriation because it is taking elements of another culture and using them in a way that is not intended by the original culture.
