A Mathematical Introduction to Compressive Sensing Simon Foucart, Holger Rauhut, 2013-08-13 At the intersection of mathematics engineering and computer science sits the thriving field of compressive sensing Based on the premise that data acquisition and compression can be performed simultaneously compressive sensing finds applications in imaging signal processing and many other domains In the areas of applied mathematics electrical engineering and theoretical computer science an explosion of research activity has already followed the theoretical results that highlighted the efficiency of the basic principles The elegant ideas behind these principles are also of independent interest to pure mathematicians A Mathematical Introduction to Compressive Sensing gives a detailed account of the core theory upon which the field is built With only moderate prerequisites it is an excellent textbook for graduate courses in mathematics engineering and computer science It also serves as a reliable resource for practitioners and researchers in these disciplines who want to acquire a careful understanding of the subject A Mathematical Introduction to Compressive Sensing uses a mathematical perspective to present the core of the

In the past half century we have experienced two major waves of methodological development in the study of human behavior in space and time The first wave was the well known quantitative revolution which propelled geography from a mainly descriptive discipline to a scientific discipline using formalism such as probability statistics and a large number of mathematical methods for analyzing spatial structures and processes under certainty and uncertainty The second wave is the recent advancement of geographical information systems which equips geographers with automation in the storage retrieval analysis and display of data Both developments have significant impacts on geographical studies in general and solutions to real life spatio temporal problems in particular They have found applications in urban and regional planning automated mapping and facilities management transportation planning and management as well as environmental planning and management to name but a few examples Both developments have one thing in common They one way or the other use computer to process and analyze data However not until recently there has been very little interaction between the two Quantitative models have largely been developed independent of the underlying data models and structures representing the spatial phenomena or processes under study Display of analysis results has been primitive in terms of the utilization of computer graphic technologies Formal models in addition to their technical difficulties have poor capability in communication with users Geographical information systems on the other hand have originally been developed with a slight intention to entertain powerful analytical models Matched Interface and Boundary (MIB) Method for Geometric Singularities and Its Application to Molecular Biology and Structural Analysis Sining Yu,2007 Interface Method and Green's Function Based Poisson Boltzmann Equation Solver and Interface Technique Based Molecular Dynamics Weihua Geng,2008 Cities, Space, and Behavior Leslie J.
