Harold J Weinberg, MD at 1/19/2022 11:00 AM

On 1/19/2022 I examined your patient Richard Rosner, a 80 y.o. right handed male with difficulty walking. This has been a progressive problem in the last year and a half. Initially he was walking with a cane and now he needs a walker. Otherwise he needs to touch walls or furniture to ambulate. He has fallen several times. He complains of a constant weakness in his right arm. He has switched to his left hand to hold objects so he will drop them. He has difficulty raising his right arm above his shoulder. He does tell me that he may have shoulder pathology as well. He also has intermittent right leg weakness but apparently this is more a phenomenon noticed when people examine him rather than a definite limitation in his function. He has atrial fibrillation and was recently hospitalized. His Coumadin was switched to Xarelto. He takes Prozac. He had been on Ludiomil in the past but did not tolerate it. He denies any extremity numbness or tingling. He does not drink alcohol. He has not had any head or spine trauma. He has had a brain and cervical spine MRI. The report of the brain MRI indicates microvascular change but no acute process. The cervical MRI report indicates multilevel foraminal stenosis bilaterally with some canal compromise.. He does describe a change in his cognitive function. He says that his speech comes out slower than his thoughts.
