UNIDAD 1

El Proceso De Planificación De Proyectos

Administración de un proyecto con Microsoft Project 2003

La administración de proyectos es simplemente la planificación, organización y administración de tareas y recursos necesarios para llevar a cabo un objetivo definido, normalmente con limitación de tiempo y costos. Un plan puede ser tan simple como escribir en un bloc de notas una lista de tareas con sus fechas previstas de comienzo y fin. Un plan complejo, por otro lado, puede constar de miles de tareas y recursos, y de un presupuesto de millones. La mayoría de los planes de proyectos comparten elementos comunes, incluyendo la división del proyecto en tareas de fácil manejo, la programación de las tareas y los seguimientos del progreso del trabajo.

Normalmente, la Administración de proyectos está compuesta por tres fases:

Planificación del proyecto y creación de una programación: es la fase más importante. Incluye la definición de las tareas y sus duraciones, el establecimiento de relaciones entre tareas y, si se va a realizar el seguimiento del uso de recursos, la asignación de los mismos. Todas las fases posteriores del proyecto se basan directamente en la información que se les proporciona cuando se planifica el proyecto.

Adaptación a los cambios: esta fase es un proceso en constante desarrollo que comienza una vez que se halla creado una planificación, y concluye cuando el proyecto está terminado. La administración de un proyecto incluye el seguimiento y ajuste de la programación para que refleje los cambios que se hayan producido a lo largo del desarrollo del proyecto.

Comunicación de la información del proyecto: en esta fase se comunica la información del proyecto a los clientes, al personal y a la administración. Una de las ventajas de usar Microsoft Project es la posibilidad de crear informes atractivos. El usuario mantiene un control absoluto que le permite modificar el aspecto y el contenido de los informes, a fin de que muestren la información deseada en un formato conveniente para el usuario.

Modelos Tradicionales de Administración de Proyectos

Método De Ruta Crítica (MRC)

El proceso de informatización de la administración de proyectos se inició en los años 50. DuPont Corporación y Remington Rand, en un esfuerzo por mejorar las técnicas de programación de proyectos, desarrollaron un sistema de programación llamado Método de Ruta Crítica; un modelo matemático que calcula la duración total de un proyecto basándose en la duración de cada tarea en particular y en sus dependencias, y que identifica qué tareas son críticas. Este modelo es el método de programación utilizado fundamentalmente en el software para la administración de proyectos actualmente, incluido Microsoft Project.
