

Worked example

Give one difference between a tendon and a ligament. (2)

Answer: A tendon joins a muscle to a bone whereas a ligament joins bone to bone.

The answer gives a clear difference by using the word 'whereas'. The word 'joins' is used but also 'whereas' provides a difference. In this example the difference is one of location but you could have used 'tendon – for example, a tendon is used to move the hand when the forearm contracts whereas a ligament stabilises a joint. Having the difference as a complete definition in anatomy and physiology and will usually be awarded one mark for each correct half of the answer.

Answering extended answer questions

Example 1:

Outline the path of a red blood cell from the renal vein to the renal artery. Include the location of the site of oxygen uptake by the red blood cell and its delivery of oxygen to body cells. (5)

To answer this question you need to know the pattern of the circulatory system including the route through the heart and basic information on the respiratory system.

Answer:

An excellent answer will state that the renal vein contains deoxygenated blood and explain what the renal vein is going back to the heart called the renal vein. The renal vein enters the right atrium and the blood travels into the right ventricle to be pumped out during a heart contraction into the pulmonary artery to the lungs. Here the red blood cell will pick up dissolved oxygen and travel to the left atrium of the heart and the pulmonary vein. Blood travels from the atrium into the left ventricle and during contraction it is pumped out into the aorta and then into the renal artery where it will deliver oxygen to the renal tissue.

A weak answer will only refer to the heart, the renal vein and may not understand nature of some blood vessels. The uptake and delivery of oxygen will be vague.

Look carefully at this that question is not just for how many words it takes to be awarded a good answer.

Example 2:

Explain how the volume of water in the human body is kept within a narrow range. (10)

To answer this question you will need to know the homeostatic control of fluid (blood) involving the nervous system, the renal system and the endocrine system.

Answer:

An excellent answer will look at both increased blood volume through salt drinking and drinking fluid increasing the osmoregulation and the hormonal processes by which the kidney fluid is released and in some circumstances water is lost from the body by the sweating of a hot climate then how water is maintained by the kidney through ADH secreted by the posterior pituitary gland.

A weak answer might not go into the detail, mention the osmotic being released by the kidney to stop fluid may leave the body of the human but not the role of the hypothalamus and anterior pituitary where ADH goes to the kidney.
