The use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire can also provide a reliable and valid measure of the prevalence of mental health problems in a community sample.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on the body composition of obese women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 20 obese women who were randomly assigned to either a diet or a control group. The diet group was instructed to consume a diet that was 1000 kcal less than their maintenance level. The control group was instructed to consume a diet that was equal to their maintenance level. The study was conducted over a 10-week period. The body composition of the subjects was measured at the beginning and end of the study. The results of the study showed that the diet group lost significantly more weight and body fat than the control group. The diet group also lost significantly more muscle mass than the control group. The results of the study suggest that a 10-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet is effective for reducing body weight and body fat in obese women. However, the diet also resulted in a loss of muscle mass, which may be a concern for some individuals.

► What are the consequences?
 The authors found that when people think about the future, they are more likely to be motivated to take action to improve their lives. However, this effect is only seen when the future is perceived as being uncertain. When the future is seen as certain, people are less likely to be motivated to take action.

► What are the implications for practice?
 The authors suggest that practitioners should help clients to develop a sense of uncertainty about the future. This can be done by encouraging clients to think about the future in terms of possibilities rather than certainties. For example, instead of saying "I will be a doctor," a client might say "I might be a doctor." This can help to increase the client's motivation to take action to improve their lives.

► What are the limitations of the study?
 The study was conducted with a sample of young adults, so the results may not be generalizable to other age groups. Additionally, the study was conducted in a laboratory setting, so the results may not be generalizable to real-world settings.

► What are the conclusions of the study?
 The authors conclude that thinking about the future can be a powerful motivator for action, but only when the future is perceived as uncertain. Practitioners should help clients to develop a sense of uncertainty about the future to increase their motivation to take action.
