Thamnen, J. (1990). Thamnen's Grammar. (Ed. by J. H. Greenberg). (Linguistic Inquiry Monograph 10). Cambridge, MA: MIT Press.

Students spend about 45 min, constructing self-growing cells, and then construct cells around a central nucleus as shown below. Students suggest different ways to design the cell wall and central nucleus, such as central vacuole/nucleus, cell-surface membrane, cell wall, etc. as they go on to construct the membrane. They discuss and vote about which design is best and the cell membrane cells are complete. Students and their designs are brought back to the front to vote on the best design or have public discussion and finally present arguments and defend their design. The discussion is then held.
