

Essay Writing Guidelines

1. The marking criteria for this module are the Standard UG criteria which can be found in the Undergraduate Handbook on Anth Student Hub.
2. Use your initiative to select relevant readings from the reading list. You should aim to explore beyond the essential tutorial readings, and you may also wish to draw upon literature from multiple weekly topics. You will find that, as you read around the literature for your chosen essay topic, different possible answers to the question emerge. There is no one correct answer, on the contrary, you are encouraged to explore different perspectives before coming to a conclusion.
3. You should aim to discuss both theoretical and ethnographic literature in your essays. Ethnographic case studies constitute anthropological “evidence”, and should be used to substantiate (i.e., to back up) your argument. It is not possible to put a precise number on this, but in a 2,500-word essay, you may want to consult 3-4 case studies (depending on the approach you choose to take). Be selective in your use of ethnography – only choose the most relevant examples that support your wider argument or point at hand. Remember, the marking criteria reward a demonstration of your ability to evaluate evidence to support an argument, analyse evidence and theories in relation to one another, and synthesise these ideas into an overarching argument. An essay that tends to just list different ethnographic examples and simply describe the details of the case studies will not score highly.
