Humphreys,1961 Air Force classification tests and the Army General Classification Test were validated against individual course grades in an aviation high school Course grades showed low to moderate levels of reliability with those in the terminal aviation mechanic curriculum somewhat less reliable than grades in the pre engineering technical curriculum Most of the multiple correlations of classification test scores with course grades were at a usefully high level Highest correlations with Air Force aptitude indexes were somewhat lower and correlations with AGCT still lower For selection purposes the Air Force classification tests do a better job than the AGCT general intelligence test The Air Force tests that have the highest utility for selection are Arithmetic Reasoning Physics and Pattern Comprehension Additional mechanical and numerical content as well as the use of keyed biographical data items may improve prediction in this school situation This is the first of a series of reports detailing the longrange validity of Air Force selection tests for technical academic criteria The Aviation High School provides a unique opportunity for collection of predictor and criterion information for the same individuals over an extended period of time war growth in industrialized economies which has been driven by rapid technological progress and far reaching structural change and in the end has resulted in increasingly skill intensive production and growing demand for more educated labour. Today it is frequently argued that with the increasing importance of the role of know how the workforce has become the most important single input in the production process. Simultaneously the dramatic increase in the availability of large micro level databases has opened enormous possibilities to study the economic role of human capital creation also empirically. The economic perspective of human capital accumulation is however of utmost importance also in times of deep economic recession. Periods of economic slowdown and rapidly increasing unemployment tend to increase the demand for advanced education and training in particular. This brings up in turn questions regarding overeducation and satisfying both private and social returns on investments in human capital.

PPF Survey ,1978      The Structure of Human Abilities (Psychology Revivals) Philip E. Vernon, 2014-01-27. First published in 1950 this revised edition of The Structure of Human Abilities was published in 1961 but remained largely unchanged from the original save for an additional supplement on the developments in factorial work on human abilities from 1950-1959. Much research had been carried out during the years leading up to publication in England and America into mental abilities and modern methods of statistical treatment especially factor analysis had been increasingly used. It was felt that the mass of diverse material was apt to confuse the student of psychology of the time especially as the results of such research were often apparently conflicting. Professor Vernon one of the leading experts in this branch of psychology sifted the material and attempted to provide a consistent picture of our mental structure.
