Golos, Frances Golos Golbitz, Frances Spatz Leighton, 1979 Abstract Clinical ecology is concerned with an individual's reaction to the environment; bad reactions or allergic conditions can be prevented or minimized with proper knowledge and preparation. A practical guide is presented to improve conditions by practicing stress reduction, planning a rotating diet from the food lists included, avoiding offending foods and substances such as plastics and paints, and learning food substitutes and new cooking methods. Other suggestions include wearing non-synthetic materials, identifying potential irritants in the home such as air fresheners or gas heating, learning new cleaning methods, replacing commercial cosmetics with home-made ones, and learning how to travel cleanly. Mental attitude and the desire to change are important in effecting a new lifestyle.
