The National Commission on Excellence in Education was appointed in 1981 by the Reagan administration, and its report issued in early May 1983 has enjoyed far more attention than the public usually gives to such documents.

Titled "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform," the report said that American education has declined precipitously over approximately the last twenty-five years.¹ It offered some striking specifics to back up this assertion.

In general, the commission attributed the decline in excellence to a "weakness of purpose, confusion of vision, underuse of talent, and lack of leadership." The report detailed our educational deficiencies, but did not go out of its way to affix blame. It did say that an educational price

A Nation at Risk Kenneth K. Wong, James W. Guthrie, Douglas N. Harris, 2014-06-03 This special issue examines the underlying assumptions of the A Nation At Risk report the context within which the Commission's work was situated and the effects of the report in improving teaching and learning as well as the performance of the public educational system The purpose is to address three broad questions Was America's education system really putting the nation at risk in the early 1980s What is the legacy of A Nation At Risk Given our current knowledge on education and human development the report's overall concern is restated What risks and opportunities lay before the nation today and how will they affect the notion of a learning society and our public education system Taken as a whole the seven articles address the three broad issues identified regarding the past current and future of educational reform in the United States

A Nation at Risk The National Commission on Excellence in Education, 1983-04-04 Secretary of Education T H Bell created the National Commission on Excellence in Education on August 26 1981 directing it to examine the quality of education in the United States and to make a report to the Nation and to him within 18 months of its first meeting In accordance with the Secretary's instructions this report contains practical recommendations for educational improvement and fulfills the Commission's responsibilities under the terms of its charter The Commission was created as a result of the Secretary's concern about the widespread public perception that something is seriously remiss in our educational system Soliciting the support of all who care about our future the Secretary noted that he was establishing the Commission based on his responsibility to provide leadership constructive criticism and effective assistance to schools and universities The Commission's charter contained several specific charges to which we have given particular attention These included assessing the quality of teaching and learning in our Nation's public and private schools colleges and universities comparing American schools and colleges with those of other advanced nations studying the relationship between college admissions requirements and student achievement in high school identifying educational programs which result in notable student success in college assessing the degree to which major social and educational changes in the last quarter century have affected student achievement and defining problems which must be faced and overcome if we are successfully to pursue the course of excellence in education The Commission's charter directed it to pay particular attention to teenage youth and we have done so largely by focusing on high schools Selective attention was given to the formative years spent in elementary schools to higher education and to vocational and technical programs We refer those interested in the need for similar reform in higher education to the recent report of the American Council on Education To Strengthen the Quality of Higher Education
