

The Circular Flow of Resources, Goods, Service and Money Payments

One way of describing the circular operations of a nation economy is through a circular flow diagram such as the one on this page. This diagram presents a highly simplified overview of the circular economy.

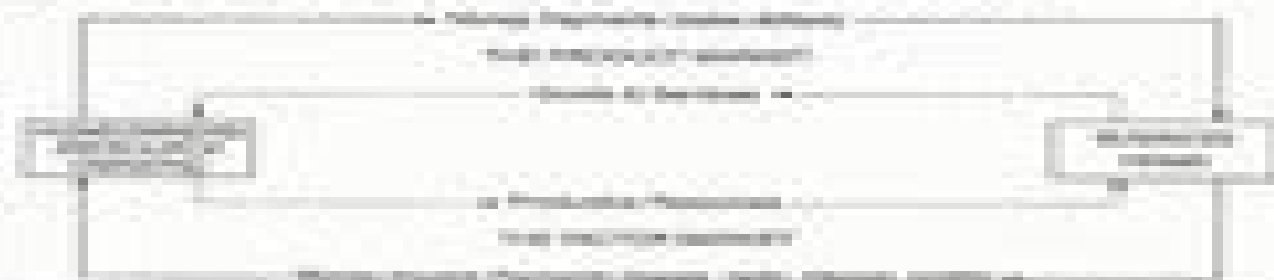

Businesses (firms) and households supply the factors of their land, labor and capital. Businesses then, in exchange, for money, receive payments for the flows of wages and interest, rent, profits and profits. Through all this exchange, businesses then become customers to purchase the finished goods and services supplied by the business firms. Business firms then use the proceeds from these sales to pay the business owners for the services the firms receive by supplying the resources. This is how the circular flow of resources, goods and services, and money flows payments is established and maintained.

Payments to the lower part of the diagram, which is sometimes called the factor market, represent income to the resource owners who sell productive resources. The flows come payments go out to the business firms that buy productive resources.

Payments payments to the upper part of the diagram reflect payments for product market output as well as the resource owners sell their goods and services. For these sales payments go out to the business firms that sell goods and services.

The important point to emphasize is that all of the money payments shown in the diagram are then received by the households and all of the goods, in a system of interdependent markets, move from households to firms either as inputs or as outputs. The prices business owners are willing to pay for finished goods and services (shown on the price resources they receive for the use of their resources, the value of resources, is then, shown to business firms and willing to pay for the services the resource owners provide. The diagram shows that payments payments to resource owners flow out from the business firms that receive resources from them.
