

Chapter 6 | Cell Cycle and Mitosis

CELL CYCLE

- The sequence of events from the time a cell first arises as a result of cell division until the time when that cell itself divides.
- The cell cycle consists of four phases: G1, S, G2, M
- It consists of periods of: Growth and Development, DNA Replication, Preparation for Division, Cell Division

RNA SYNTHESIS

- Is necessary in order to code for progression through all cell cycle phases.
- In prokaryotic cells, transcription (DNA to mRNA) and translation (mRNA to protein) are so closely linked that translation usually begins before transcription is complete. In eukaryotic cells, however, the two processes are separated in both space and time:

mRNA is synthesized in the nucleus, and proteins are synthesized in the cytoplasm.

Transcription

- The process of copying a segment of DNA into RNA.
- In eukaryotes, this occurs in the nucleus.
- The DNA double helix is unwound, and one strand is used as a template to synthesize a complementary RNA strand.

Translation

- The process of synthesizing a protein from an mRNA template.
- In eukaryotes, this occurs in the cytoplasm.
- The mRNA is read by a ribosome, which uses the genetic code to assemble a chain of amino acids.
- The chain of amino acids folds into a specific shape, which determines the protein's function.

MITOSIS

- is a type of cell division in which the nucleus of the cell divides into two nuclei with identical genetic material. The resulting two daughter cells have the same number of chromosomes similar to the parent cell; thus, a diploid parent cell containing two sets of chromosomes (paternal and maternal chromosome sets) will result into two diploid daughter cells after mitosis.
- occurs only in somatic (body) cells of eukaryotes. It is used by multicellular organisms for growth and development, repair of tissues, and in asexual reproduction.
- is the process in which a eukaryotic cell nucleus splits in two, followed by the division of the parent cell into two daughter cells.
- is a continuous process but it is traditionally divided into five stages:

Prophase

- Chromosomes condense and become visible.
- The nuclear envelope breaks down.
- Spindle fibers begin to form.

Metaphase

- Chromosomes align at the center of the cell.
- Spindle fibers attach to the centromeres.

Anaphase

- Sister chromatids separate and move to opposite poles.
- Spindle fibers pull the chromatids apart.
