Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi was very commonly referred to by the name of Mahatma, which means great soul. He was born in Gujarat on October 2, 1869. Born as a fortunate child, Gandhi received a good education, but, unfortunately, turned out to be a mediocre student. At age 13, he was married to Kasturba Makhnaji, a wedding that was arranged by their parents. Gandhi was unhappy at college and at age 18, when his father offered him to go overseas for study, he accepted. Gandhi determinately followed Hindu practices including vegetarianism and abstinence from sex and drinking. Gandhi after a long struggle settled in London and researched many religions including Hinduism, Christianity, Buddhism and several others . In 1893, Gandhi took a 1-year contract for legal work in South Africa with hopes to boost his self-confidence. His stay in Africa eventually extended to 21 years during which time he became a steadfast and resilient man. He came across his first injustice in South Africa when he was thrown off a train during his travel to Transvaal for his first case. He decided to fight against the injustice, but his fight was very non-violent, further driven by the power of truth and righteousness. He further termed his struggles as Satyagraha.

Upon his return to India, he felt the urge to work for his own people, and for the same purpose, he refined Satyagraha. He stood for injustices and challenged the people of India to stand up for their rights. Even though Gandhi held not office, and was not the proud owner of many estates, he managed to gain the love and respect from his own people. The main reason behind this was that he practiced what he preached, and seeing that, people grew more and more respectful for their leader. . It was during his first year
