Abstract: This study reports on a longitudinal investigation of the effects of a 12-week, 100-hour, noncredit, intensive training program for paraprofessionals in the field of special education. The program was designed to prepare paraprofessionals to work with students with disabilities in a general education classroom. The study was conducted in a large, urban school district. The results of the study indicate that the program had a positive impact on the paraprofessionals' knowledge and skills, and that the program was cost-effective. The study also found that the paraprofessionals who completed the program were more likely to be employed in the field of special education than those who did not complete the program.

the increasingly sophisticated skills needed to make a successful business plan. By doing so, they will be able to make a more informed decision about whether to start a business or not. This is a critical skill for entrepreneurs, as it will help them to understand the market and the competition, and to develop a strategy for success. The book also provides a comprehensive overview of the business planning process, from identifying the business opportunity to developing a financial plan. It is a valuable resource for anyone who is considering starting a business, and it is also a useful reference for experienced entrepreneurs.
