

FIELA SE KIND -SUMMARY IN ENGLISH

In Chapter 1 of 'Fiela se Kind,' Elias van Rooyen ceases his efforts in chopping yellowwood beams due to an intense fog engulfing the Forest (Bos). Unlike his diligent woodcutters, Elias appreciates preserving his energy and attributes any accomplishment to good planning and fortune, both of which were rare in the Bos. Discovery of a wagon parked by the highroad nearby Diepwalle prompts Elias to strike a deal with its owners from behind the Lange Kloof mountains. These strangers wish to purchase wood directly from the woodcutters, bypassing the log buyers in Knysna. Elias, unafraid of the log buyers' potential retaliation, brokers a deal to provide these men with finished beams, a strategy that will reduce their journey's time and burden. Elias, living with his wife Barta and their four children in Barnard-se-eiland, is the only non-woodcutter there, producing wooden beams for a continuous income. Unlike his counterparts, he does not barter his efforts only for coffee, sugar, and flour from the log buyers in town. But his profits are barely enough to scrape by, even when he catches his meat. In the dense fog, Elias's three-year-old son, Lukas, goes missing. Despite Elias's insistence that the boy must be hiding somewhere, the community's growing anxiety is difficult to ignore. Even Elias grapples with fear as he remembers the lethal perils of wandering off alone in the Bos, especially where 'grootvoetes' (a term for elephants) roam. With the van Rooyen household plunging into grief and chaos, Elias is torn between staying with his distraught wife and physically joining the search. Hard decisions have to be made as the day ends without any sign of the missing Lukas, intensifying the community's fear of losing the boy to the unforgiving Bos. In the continuation of Chapter 1 of 'Fiela se Kind,' the focus turns to the mounting search for the missing Lukas. At nightfall, the women, Malie and Sofie, fortify the lanterns for the search party. They dismiss the threat of encountering 'grootvoetes,' or elephants, stating that the nearest ones are in Gouna's Bos. Martiens arranges tasks for people; only Anna gets to rest, Gertjie must stay with Barta, and Malie and Sofie are to construct a substantial fire on the island to guide Lukas home if he wakes. At dawn, Koos van Sofia departs for Diepwalle to inform the forest-warden of the missing child. By afternoon, 14 woodcutters join the search, and the following day, the town's constable arrives to assist. He beckons a message to the magistrate, and by evening, the lumberjacks have to help the constable, who is lost and injured in Jonkersberg's ravine. When the constable suggests accepting the possibility of Lukas being dead, Martiens refutes, arguing that the Bos makes children tougher. By the fourth and fifth days, the search party grows to 24 and 30 members, respectively. On the sixth day, they are 40. On the eighth day,
